JUDICIAL DEFERENCE TO MUTUAL FUND BOARDS: LESSONS FROM POST-JONES EXCESSIVE FEE LITIGATION

Following on the Supreme Court's Jones decision, the plaintiffs' bar filed a large wave of actions claiming that mutual funds paid excessive fees to their advisers. The authors analyze this litigation. They focus first on plaintiffs' challenges to the independence and qualifications of independent directors. They then turn to plaintiffs' claims that board processes for reviewing and approving fees were deficient. Although all of plaintiffs' claims have been rejected by the courts, the authors conclude that new fee litigation is "almost certain" and that recent decisions provide valuable insights into current best practices for fund directors.

Mutual funds are a more than $21 trillion industry, a fact not lost on the plaintiffs' bar.[1] In 1970, Congress enacted Section 15(c) of the Investment Company Act (the "ICA"), the primary federal statute governing mutual funds, which set forth the role of independent directors of mutual funds in reviewing and approving investment advisory contracts and other contracts that establish the fees charged to fund shareholders. At the same time, Congress enacted Section 36(b) of the ICA, which established a fiduciary duty on the part of fund advisers with respect to their receipt of fees, and provided fund shareholders with a private right of action to assert claims for breaches of that duty.[2] Since 1970, the industry has contended with multiple waves of largely attorney-driven Section 36(b) suits based on evolving theories of liability.

In 2010, the Supreme Court held in Jones v. Harris Associates L.P. that, to establish liability under Section 36(b), a plaintiff must show that an investment adviser charged a fee "so disproportionately large that it bears no reasonable relationship to the services rendered and could not have been the product of arm's length bargaining."[3] In doing so, the Court held that a lower court must consider "all relevant circumstances," including the six-factor framework for assessing Section 36(b) claims set forth in the Second Circuit's 1982 decision in Gartenberg v. Merrill Lynch Asset Management, Inc.[4] The "Gartenberg factors," which

The Review of Securities & Commodities Regulation

Now in its 54th year of publication, The Review of Securities & Commodities Regulation is published 22 times a year (twice a month except for July and August, when it appears once a month).

As securities, commodities, and banking law have become increasingly complex, The Reviews have become ever more valuable to lawyers in these fields. News of developments, available from many sources, is one thing, but only in-depth analysis will put those developments in perspective and keep a practitioner from being blind-sided by some aspect of the subject that is not news. A half-hour spent consulting a Review article is likely to be the most efficient and economical way of penetrating a new subject or simply keeping up with an old one.

Your subscription to The Review of Securities & Commodities Regulation includes, at no extra charge, the monthly The Review of Banking & Financial Services (regularly $680 as a standalone subscription), now in its 32nd year of publication. Each Review issue consists of one or two articles on current topics in securities, commodities, or banking law that are written by outstanding practitioners in the field.

The Reviews are unique in being published frequently enough to be current and being written by practitioners for practitioners. The articles are up-to-date, concise, and practical. With their broad range of authors from major firms, The Reviews provide a unique window into professional thinking on a host of subjects and problems that confront practicing securities, commodities, and banking lawyers. For practice in these areas, they are a must-have resource.
